

SAFEGUARDING CHILDREN
INFORMATION UPDATE - 291
11th January 2018

‘Life in Likes’ (04/01/18)

The Children’s Commissioner for England is today launching this new report on the impact of social media on the lives of children before they become teenagers. Whilst most social media sites have an official age limit of 13 years, some research has suggested $\frac{3}{4}$ of 10 -12 year olds have a social media account.

Today’s report reveals many children are approaching a ‘cliff edge’ as they transition from primary to secondary school, with social media becoming much more important in their lives but causing them greater anxiety.

The study suggests some children are becoming almost addicted to ‘likes’ as a form of social validation that makes them happy and that many are increasingly anxious about their online image and ‘keeping up appearances’.

Anne Longfield is calling on schools and parents to prepare children for this change towards the end of primary school. She also calls for compulsory digital literacy and online resilience lessons for Year 6 and 7s, so that they learn about the emotional side of social media and not just messages about safety.

West Wales parents urged to check MMR status as children return to school (05/01/18)

With measles continuing to circulate widely in Europe, Public Health Wales continues to urge parents to check that their children are fully vaccinated with two doses of MMR.

In West Wales, uptake of the second dose of MMR in five-year-olds stands at 88.4 per cent – well below the 95% target that would prevent outbreaks of measles.

As children return to school, the risk of coming into contact with someone with measles increases, and parents are urged to check that their children are protected against this potentially fatal infection.

Smoke alarms key to preventing the death of children in fires (14/12/17)

A new report from Public Health Wales has shown that the lack of a working smoke alarm was a contributing factor in the incidents reviewed where a child died in a fire.

The 'Thematic review of deaths of children through fire' published by the Child Death Review Programme, found that the majority of accidental fires start in the kitchen; and home safety education is effective at increasing the proportion of families with functional smoke alarms, fire guards, and a fire escape plan which could prevent deaths through fire in the future.

Keeping children safe in education: proposed revisions (14/12/17)

The DfE invites your views on changes to the statutory guidance Keeping children safe in education (KCSIE) and a new departmental non-statutory advice document covering sexual violence and sexual harassment between children in schools and colleges.

The consultation seeks views on revisions to KCSIE, the statutory guidance to which all schools and colleges must have regard when carrying out their duties to safeguard and promote the welfare of children. KCSIE sets out the legal duties that schools and colleges must comply with, together with good practice guidance on what schools and colleges should do in order to keep children safe.

The guidance is extensive, covering what staff should know and do to safeguard children, the management of safeguarding in schools and colleges, safer recruitment and responding to allegations of abuse against staff. The department keeps its statutory guidance under review and revises it as required to keep it up to date and relevant.

We are consulting on a wide variety of proposed changes to KCSIE. The aim is to help schools and colleges to better understand what they are required to do by law and what we strongly advise they should do in order to safeguard and promote the welfare of children.

We have made changes throughout KCSIE to reflect the changes colleagues are making, in parallel, to Working Together to Safeguard Children. WT is being consulted on separately and any resulting revisions to the final version will be reflected in KCSIE.

In addition, this consultation also seeks views on a new departmental non-statutory advice document covering sexual violence and sexual harassment between children in schools and colleges.

Closing date: 22nd February 2018

The updated guidance will support schools in delivering the new subjects of Relationships Education at primary and Relationships and Sex Education (RSE) at secondary, as well as, potentially, Personal, Social, Health and Economic Education (PSHE).

Consultations (continued)

Wales sets out plans to end the physical punishment of children (09/01/18)

The Minister for Children and Social Care, Huw Irranca-Davies, has launched a consultation on the Welsh Government's proposal to remove the defence of reasonable punishment in Wales.

The Welsh Government has a long standing record of working to ensure children have the best start in life and of promoting children's rights. This is why the Welsh Government is now intending to bring forward legislation to make it clear that physically punishing a child is no longer acceptable in Wales.

The proposed legislation would not involve the creation of a new offence. It would instead remove a defence to the existing offences of assault and battery. It would mean any adult looking after a child would no longer be able to use physical or corporal punishment against them.

The Minister said the Welsh Government's aim was to accelerate existing trends in the way parents in Wales discipline their children and to support them in feeling confident to choose positive and more effective methods of discipline.

Closing date: 2nd April 2018
